For as in one body we have many members, and the members do not all have the same function, so we, though many, are one body in Christ, and individually members one of another.

Romans 12:4-5 ESV

In 2007, the Oakland Raiders drafted a young quarterback with the number one overall pick, expecting him to lead the team back to championship glory. He was given the starting job late in his rookie season, playing in the final 4 games for the struggling team, losing every game. Such struggles are not unusual for a rookie quarterback, so the team named him the starter to open the next season. Unfortunately, things only got worse. He reported to the team out of shape and his on-field performance continued to decline. To prove that the QB wasn't keeping his commitment to his team, his coaches used to send him home with blank video tapes to determine if he was studying film. The next day, the player would come in claiming that he had studied the film. He was let go after his third season and never played another game in the NFL and is known as one of the biggest "busts" in draft history.

Being a member of any athletic team is a commitment that involves certain expectations. The same is true of being a church member.

Becoming a church member is not just about having your name on a role. When you join a local church, you are making a commitment that involves certain expectations. It's entirely possible to have your name on the church roster, but not be a member in any real, meaningful sense.

Faithful church members: gather, connect, grow, serve, build, pray, and give.

Over the next few months, in my articles for The Messenger, I am going to be expounding upon these expectations.
